UK Outlook for Friday 31 Dec 2021 to Sunday 9 Jan 2022:
Unsettled weather is likely to dominate most of this period with Atlantic weather systems continuing to arrive from the west. To begin, largely fine with brighter spells likely for some once rain clears eastward. Further rain arriving into the west and southwest later. Heading into January, further showers or longer spells of rain from the west are possible, perhaps bringing heavy rain to western hills. Drier, brighter and colder spells may develop between the rain at times, with spells of showers still possible. Driest conditions mainly confined in the southeast. Through this period, it will be rather windy with possible coastal gales in the west. Temperatures likely mild or very mild. A possible brief settled spell may develop towards the very end of the period.
